Mount Rushmore is perhaps one of North America's most distinguished and famous landmarks, right after the Statue of Liberty. It features the busts of four U.S. Presidents, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt.

This place has an interesting story. First, a New York lawyer named Charles E. Rushmore visited the Black Hills in 1885. He asked a local the name of the granite mountain before them. Since the peak had no name, the man replied humorously, "Mount Rushmore." The name has never been changed since! In 1923 state historian Doane Robinson suggested carving some giant statues in South Dakota's Black Hills. However, the formations chosen, known as the Needles, were too fragile, and the sculptor, Mr. Gutzon Borglum, decided to use the granite mountain instead. Born in a family of Danish Mormons in Idaho in 1867, Borglum studied art in Paris and enjoyed moderate fame as a sculptor after remodeling the torch for the Statue of Liberty. Borglum chose the presidents "in commemoration of the foundation, preservation and continental expansion of the United States." President Calvin Coolidge dedicated the memorial in 1927.

At this very moment, near this mountain, there is another colossal monument in progress: the Crazy Horse Memorial, to honor this courageous Indian leader. In this way, history is preserved, as big as the heritage is, to be shared with everyone in an attractive way.
